Dan Darghan, Inspector of Agriculture, announced that the new agricultural inspector, Mr. J.K. Brown, had taken over the duties of the former inspector, Mr. A.E. Smith. The new inspector had been transferred from the southern district to take over the northern region.

Mr. Brown mentioned that the recent drought had caused some concern among the farmers, but he assured them that the measures taken by the government would help mitigate the effects of the drought. He also highlighted the importance of sustainable agriculture practices to ensure long-term food security.

The meeting was attended by representatives from various local farms and cooperatives, who expressed their support for the new inspector's efforts to improve agricultural practices in the region.
