

CYBER NAMES : CONSTRUCTING INDIVIDUAL AND CULTURAL IDENTITIES

Karen Kow Yip Cheng
University of Malaya

Focus of Study

The focus of this study is on the construction of individual and cultural identity via ones' choice of cyber names in chat rooms.

This paper is a preliminary study of the construction of identities via the choice of names in chat rooms. Given the anonymous nature of chat rooms, this study is a particularly complex one.

Cyber Names

By using cyber names, the chat room community identifies themselves and their netizens as inhabitants of a different and unorthodox world, but it is nevertheless one that recognizes the netizens as a community in their own cyber domain.

Identity

The relative anonymity of cyberspace allows for the making of identities that are not bound by the conventions of a physical world. In other words, in an alternate, notional world that has no borders or boundaries, netizens are free to construct an individual and cultural identity of their own choice.

Second Language Identities

David Block, 2007

- Identity as how individuals are defined, contained and enabled by documents as opposed to the actions they take. Fixed and deterministic.
- Identity- one that is open-ended and unstable one that is invented.
- Identity- an academic concept.

Identity

A name is one of the things that give individuals their own special identity, while also helping others identify the person.

Global Culture/Individual Identity: Searching for a Home in the Cultural Supermarket.

Matthews, G. (2000) cultural supermarket- a range of identities to be assumed.

Not a free market there are social structures within which individual exist which constrain the amount and scope of choice available to individual.

One Nation Identity

Milton Gordon (1964) in his 'melting pot' theory looked at melting pot assimilation which involved the fusion, both cultural and biological, of all societal groups into a totally new blend. In this hybrid society, all racial and ethnic groups become 'melted together by the fires of American influence and interaction into a distinctly new type' (Gordon 1964:115). The final outcome of such a homogenizing process is the fusion of formerly distinct groups into an ethnically undifferentiated society.

Multiculturalism which rejects assimilation began as a movement in the field of education (Higham 2001). It calls for equal-respect and recognition of contributions of all racial and ethnic groups with a focus on the importance of maintaining cultural diversity (Higham 2001; Giroux 1994; Dworkin & Dworkin 1999; Gordon & Newfield 1996).

COMPOSITE IDENTITY

While assimilation is not the desired outcome in Malaysia's quest to be a globalized nation, multiculturalism—for want of a better term—is. multiculturalism is seen as one that rejects assimilation into a mainstream culture and an ethnically undifferentiated society. Multiculturalism, in the context of Malaysia, maintains pluralism, that is, the cultural diversity and uniqueness of all ethnic groups in Malaysia. However it does not see the maintenance process as one that rejects 'intimate group relationships' (Gordon 1994; Gans 1997) but rather one that fosters unity in diversity.
